

ing clearly that large portions of the strata had been removed from the tops of the hills as well as from the valleys.

I was surprised, in the course of our ride along the bottom of a wooded valley, to find the air infected far and wide with a fetid odour, which, my companion informed me, proceeded from a skunk. The animal, he supposed, might be half a mile or more to wind ward of our path.