

ing to catch the tone of his frank and generous spirit. And seeing how very much he succeeded in accomplishing within the limits of a life that has, alas! fallen short by more than thirty years of the old allotted term, let us diligently carry on, in the love of truth, our not unimportant labors, remembering that much may be accomplished in comparatively brief space if no time be lost, and that to each and all that "night cometh" at an uncertain hour, under whose dense and unbroken shadow "no man can work."

The End.
