

times more complex. Bound elasticities become free and pass over into living forces, or vice versa. This restoration of the monistic conception of nature constitutes the chief and most comprehensive merit of our new theory of development, and is the crown of modern natural science.