

rarely retain their hold on our mind for very long or in the same degree, and these changes of interest and taste are more rapid the further we go back in the conscious life of the soul, whilst in old age these feelings become mostly less vivid and not infrequently die away altogether.