

CHAP. VI. THE ARGUMENT PURSUED FROM THE COMPARATIVE ANATOMY	151
CHAP. VII. OF SENSIBILITY AND TOUCH	170
The Sensibility of the Surface compared with that of the deeper Parts	174
Pain the Safeguard of the Body	178
The protecting Sensibility of the Eye compared with the Sensibility of the Heart	182
Pleasurable Sensations could not have been the Motives of Action	188
CHAP. VIII. OF THE SENSES GENERALLY INTRODUCTORY TO THE SENSE OF TOUCH	191
The Sense of Touch	198
Of the Cuticle	202
The Hoofs of Animals and their Sensibility	205
CHAP. IX. OF THE MUSCULAR SENSE	212
Of the Sensibility of the Infant to Impressions, and gradual Improvement of the Sense of Touch	212
Of the sense in Insects and Fishes	221
Loss of the Sense	225
Pleasures arising from the Muscular Sense	227
CHAP. X. THE HAND NOT THE SOURCE OF INGENUITY OR CONTRIVANCE, NOR CONSEQUENTLY OF MAN'S SUPERIORITY	230
The Capacities of the Mind correspond with the Instrument	232
Instincts. Young of the Alligator	234
Malignant Passions find their Instruments without Hands.—The Beggar of Moscow	235
The Subject illustrated by the Organs of Speech	236
Improved Ingenuity defeats the Ancient Arts of Design	239
Expression in the Hand. Quintilian	240
Changes in the Globe and successive Epochs	244
Concluding Remarks	250