

over every accessible region of the globe. Thus, then, from the consideration of the peculiar structure of the vital as well as the mechanical organs of the human frame, may be derived additional proofs of their being constructed with reference to faculties of a higher and more extensive range than those of any, even the most favoured species of the brute creation.