

which was at least equivocal, and intermediate between that of man and the brute, is, in fact, no other than a real brute, wearing externally a human mask, but internally destitute of thought, and every other attribute which constitutes the human species : an animal inferior to many others in his relative faculties, and most essentially different from the human race in his nature, temperament, and also in the time necessary to his education, gestation, growth, and duration of life ; that is, in every real habitude which constitutes what we call Nature in a particular being.

THE ORANG-OUTANG*, OR THE PONGO, AND THE JOCKO.

WE shall present the Orang-outang and the Jocko together, because they, possibly, belong to the same species. Of all the ape and monkey kinds, these bear the greatest resemblance to the human form, and consequently, those

* Orang-outang is the name this animal bears in the East-Indies ; pongo, its denomination at Lowando, a province of Congo ; and Kukurlacko in some parts of the East-Indies.
