

	PAGE
In the reading.—Homeward bound.—A story thirty miles long suddenly broken off.—Night among strangers.—Cromarty.—The end of the righteous.—Further desolations of death.—Glimpses of the past.—Witch-burning.—Tales of Culloden.....	102

CHAPTER VII.

The subscription school and its schoolmasters.—Rory Shingles' Cave.—A wild half-savage life.—A new friend.—Inflammability of shale due to the animal substance it contains.—Evils of leadership.—A serious scrape.—Discipline of a wholesome lesson.—The new schoolmaster.—Curious revelations of arithmetic and copy-books.—Increased warmth of the water in windy days accounted for.—A test poem.—Offences and punishments.—Abrupt termination of my school education.—A pasquinade.—A broken circle of companions.—Wise plans interrupted.—Johnstone, the old forty-two man.—A desperate enterprise successful.—The old soldier's difficulties..... 123

CHAPTER VIII.

Choice of a profession.—Work in the Cromarty quarries.—Dreams of a hermit life not restricted to poets.—Nobility of toil.—Varieties of the quarry limestone.—A taste for the beauties of natural scenery a never-failing spring of delight.—Mental depression consequent upon physical fatigue.—Instances of great insensibility to personal danger.—Drinking usages of the profession.—Temptation overcome.—Organisms of the lias.—Use of spent thunderbolts.—Fossil wonders of the eathic lias.—An important discovery not followed up.—Journey into the Highlands,—the old shepherd's vision.—Forest of native Scotch pine.—A new acquaintance.—Moonlit exhibitions of natural scenery..... 144

CHAPTER IX.

Don Side.—A midnight hour.—Gillie-Christ.—Spectral appearance in the churchyard.—The poor maniac.—Origin of the soul.—Traditionary stories.—Highland character.—The maniac's quarrel with her husband.—Something peculiarly unwholesome in the society of a strong-minded maniac.—Her anecdotes of a brother.—A specimen of barrack-life.—A new school.—Professional characteristics.—Bothy life of the North-country masons..... 169