

CHAPTER X.

	PAGE
Interesting objects around Conon Side.—The poetic mood.—The accomplishment of verse distinct from the poetic faculty.—Stanzas.— Unio Margaritiferus , and the formation of pearls.—Bathing in the haunted pools of Conon.—Superstition has her figures as certainly as poesy.—The ruined chapel in the woods.—A dark rivulet and its trout.—Curious property of Flounders.— Libellula .—Different stages of the animal creation.—Human contrivances anticipated in both animal and vegetable nature.—Jock, the story-teller of the barracks.—The faculty for extemporary fabrication a peculiarity of a rude society.—Musings.—Verses to the Conon.....	186

CHAPTER XI.

The young painter's home.—Symbolism of ancient Celtic sculpture.—“Poor lame Danie.”—Barrack-life again.—The conglomerate deposits of Conon.—Goblin of Craighouse.—Highlanders of the border districts inferior to those of the interior.—Superstition natural to a state of failing health.—Disastrous effects of the large farm system on the people of the agricultural districts.—Study of the old Scotch poets.—Alleged superiority of the old Greek and Roman writers accounted for.....	210
---	-----

CHAPTER XII.

Disastrous consequences to the mechanic of being an inferior workman.—My friend of the Doocot Cave.—A perilous adventure.—Ludicrous expedient to fix a boundary-stone.—Click Clack, the Carter.—Unique features of the metamorphic system.—Recession of the shore of Loch Maree.—Music on the waters.—Island Maree.—Comforts of a barrack.—Home of a Highlander.—“Without Gaelic in Gairloch.”—Effect of a potato famine.—Disparity among people of contiguous districts due to a mixture of races.—Discrepancy in the appearance of the sexes on the west coast of Scotland.—Gaelic Thinking in Scripture English.....	235
---	-----