

CHAPTER XVI.

	PAGE
A great fire in Edinburgh.—Special visitations of heaven difficult to be determined.—Dr. M'Cric.—My reading and Rambles.— Nox Ambrosiana .—We understand an author the better for knowing how he looks.—Quit Edinburgh for Cromarty.—Superstition of sailors.—Stanzas written at sea.—Reflections on the condition of the lower classes,—causes of their degradation on the increase.—Renewed acquaintance with my friend at Doocot.—Man had no responsible predecessor on earth.—Intellectual superiority of the scholar over the working-man not so great as has been supposed.....	333

CHAPTER XVII.

My religious impressions,—Powerlessness of mere speculative theology.—Convinced that the "Word made flesh" is the central object of the Christian system,—importance of this belief.—Adaptation of the scheme of redemption to the heart of man,—practical power of this principle.—Teachings of geology on the doctrine of the union of two natures in Christ.—Failing health.—Stanzas.—Convalescence.—Sketches of a gipsy party.....	357
--	-----

CHAPTER XVIII.

A new branch of employment.—Observations on the floras of Kirkmichæl,—their bearing on the development hypothesis.—Angus, the idiot of Nigg.—Jock Gordon, the imbecile of Cromarty,—their rivalry, and its issue.—An original theory of the mind.—The ministers of Cromarty.—Meeting with Mr. Stewart,—our subsequent intimacy.—His manner of preaching.....	378
--	-----

CHAPTER XIX.

Set out to seek employment at Inverness.—Interview with the parish minister.—The sort of patronage which letters of introduction procure.—Planning to get employment.—Both verse and old English fail me.—A jilted bridegroom.—The Osars of Inverness.—Criticism on the magistrates.—Determine to publish a volume of poems.—Death of my uncle James, and of my friend William Ross.	398
---	-----