

liverances, as also in the discussions carried on mainly in the Aristotelian Society, the representatives of the two schools seem to be coming nearer together, each having learned something from the other. It is significant that the relation of psychology and logic forms also one of the burning questions of philosophical thought in Germany.