

CONTENTS OF THE FOURTH VOLUME.

CHAPTER VII.

OF THE BEAUTIFUL.

The Æsthetical century, 3; The term Æsthetic, 5; Æsthetics in the eighteenth century, 6; Systematised in Germany, 6; Sociological causes, 6; Stimulus from classical and foreign literatures, 8; Influence of the German University system, 8; Kant, 9; The Critique of Judgment, 12; Schiller, 13; Special mission of Art, 16; Influence of Revolution, 19; Schiller's assimilation of Kantian Ethics, 21; Split in the humanistic movement, 21; Goethe's "inner freedom," 22; Severance of art and literature from practice, 23; Schelling the philosopher of Romanticism, 24; Shaftesbury and Hutcheson, 27; Kant's theory of disinterested pleasure, 28; The Beautiful and the Sublime, 28; Schiller's "Play-theory," 30; Nature and Art, 34; Personality of the Artist, 34; The "Characteristic," 36; Goethe on seriousness and play, 38; Schelling on Art and the problem of Reality, 39; This only a transitional point of view, 41; Philosophical meaning of Schelling's attempt, 43; Mythology, 45; Want of logical method in Schelling, 47; This supplied by Hegel, 48; Neglect of active process, 49; Place of Æsthetics in Hegel's system, 51; Art, Religion, and Philosophy form an ascending series, 53; Art abandoned by Schelling for mysticism, 56; Hegel unappreciative of natural beauty, 56; Solger, 57; Chr. H. Weisse, 60; Lotze's version of Weisse's doctrine, 65; Schopenhauer and von Hartmann, 69; Peculiarity of Schopenhauer's philosophy, 70; His happy interpretation of the beautiful in nature as well as in art, 75; His grouping of the arts, 79; His theory of Music, 79; Von Hartmann, 83; Contrast of Will and Intellect, transcended in the Unconscious, 84;