

Feuerbach, 198 ; Feuerbach and Comte compared, 201 ; Revival of ethical studies, 202 ; Herbart, 205 ; Lotze's doctrine of values, 206 ; Metaphysics based on ethics, 207 ; Evidence of recent tendencies, 209 ; Schopenhauer's doctrine of the primacy of the Will, 209 ; Darwinian evolution as a corrective of pessimism in Germany, 211 ; Anthropology, 212 ; Antithesis between fixed moral ideals and the study of the genesis of morality, 213 ; Herbert Spencer, 214 ; Influence in England of Kant, 215 ; T. H. Green and Ed. Caird, 216 ; Green and Lotze, 217 ; Green and Spencer, 221 ; Sidgwick's 'Methods of Ethics,' 223 ; Sidgwick and Lotze, 224 ; Do not sufficiently appreciate Evolution, 227 ; Spencer's acknowledged disappointment, 229 ; Mill and Huxley on the cosmic process, 232 ; Hypothetical Idealism, 232 ; Attempts at synthesis of idealism and naturalism, 233 ; Fouillee's Idées-forces, 237 ; J. M. Guyau, 242 ; Indefiniteness of 'the Ideal' as conceived by these thinkers, 244 ; Theories of value in Germany, 244 ; Reaction against these analytical researches, 246 ; Fr. Nietzsche, 246 ; Two theories of the Good : ends and duties, 250 ; Paulsen's Ethics, 251 ; Return to Kantian Ethics, 254 ; W. Wundt, 254 ; Necessity of going beyond pure ethics, 257 ; Problems of the Spirit and of Human Society, 258.

CHAPTER IX.

OF THE SPIRIT.

Internationalisation of thought, 260 ; More marked in Science than in Philosophy, 261 ; Especially as the problems become more speculative, 262 ; Least of all in the religious problem, 262 ; Relation of Philosophy and Theology, 263 ; Geist, Spirit, and Mind, 263 ; Distinction in Germany between theological and philosophical literature, 265 ; As also between scientific and philosophical literature, 266 ; Schleiermacher, 268 ; Absence of dualism in England, 268 ; Advantages and disadvantages of rigid lines, 269 ; Metaphysical point of view, 271 ; Psychological point of view, 271 ; Historical point of view, 272 ; Union of Kant's ethics and Schleiermacher's psychology, 274 ; Kant's three verities, 277 ; Twofold order of ideas, 277 ; Mixed with duality of sensible and intelligible world, 279 ; The reconciliation, 283 ; Fichte's and Schopenhauer's solution, 285 ; Different movements converge in Schleiermacher, 287 ; Uplifting of popular education, 291 ; Hegel's formula for religion, 293 ; Jacobi's opposition, 296 ; Hamann and Herder, 300 ; Influence of extramural teaching on the schools, 303 ; Schleiermacher's grasp of historical religion, 305 ;