

Æsthetical and social conception of religion, 309; Neglect of Schleiermacher's psychology, 316; Three distinct conceptions, 319; Albrecht Ritschl, 320; Gap in his theory: Lotze, 324; Different treatment by Kant, Hegel, Schleiermacher, 324; Lotze on "Personality," 327; His relations to Weisse, 329; Personality not a limitation, 331; Relation of Lotze to Hegel and Schleiermacher, 333; The "Miraculous," 334; Nature and the Supernatural, 341; The mechanical and the spiritual in Kant, 342; Fechner and Lotze, 343; Relation between Personality and the Highest Good, 345; Existence of Evil, 345; The idea of a Revelation, 347; Ritschl's assertion of the independence of religious beliefs, 348; Radical distinction of religious from scientific and philosophical thought, 351; Natural Religion, 352; Goethe on the spirit of worship, 355; Carlyle and Goethe, 356; The British and the German mind, 358; English thought neither radical nor systematic, 360; English ideas developed abroad, 361; Hume on Religion, 364; Mill's 'Three Essays,' 365; Mansel's "Bampton Lectures," 367; Attacked by Maurice and Mill, 368; Spencer, 369; Later Oxford philosophy, 370; Thesis of the idealistic school, 371; Absence of definite ideas comparable with those of Naturalism, 372; Discussion of Personality, 373; Empirical and transcendental consciousness, 373; The ethical problem, 373; Discussion in 'Nineteenth Century': Martineau, 374; Comtian view, 378; Morality and historical religion, 379; Can there be an independent morality? 380; Balfour's 'Foundations of Belief,' 381; Coincidence with the Hegelian position, 385; Points of contact with Lotze, 386; Problem of moral education, 388; Pessimism and extreme Individualism, 390; Schopenhauer and Nietzsche, 390; Renewed interest in religious problem, 393; W. H. Mallock, 394; Religious philosophy in France, 397; De Lamennais, 400; Reversion to a position like Hegel's, 405; Departure from this in the thought of the day, 406; The problem of progress, 407; The difficulty of Evil and Sin, 407; J. M. Guyau, 408; Morality the "last dogma," 411; Transformation of the theological view, 414; Religious interest in the problem of Society, 419.

CHAPTER X.

OF SOCIETY.

The social problem in the largest sense not recognised before the eighteenth century, 420; American struggle for independence, 422; The French Revolution, 423; Herder and Rousseau, 423; Vico,